Student to Doctor Debt Management Plan

One of the goals of a Burrell College of Osteopathic Medicine Office of Financial Aid is to provide the student with information about loans borrowing, default prevention, debt management, and loan repayment. When accepting loans and repaying student loans, our staff wants the student to become an active partner in achieving that goal. Take the time to read and learn a borrower's rights and responsibilities when signing a Master Promissory Note (MPN-legal document) for any loan. The following information will provide you information on debt management, financial literacy, investing, credit management, and additional topics that are resources to strengthen the student's knowledge about financial education.

Loan Forgiveness Programs As a medical student who has borrowed loans to help finance your education there may be a program to help you relieve some of your loan debt. Please see the links below for more information.

Federal Loan Requirements Counseling and Financial Literacy

The key to successful debt management is knowing your loan responsibilities. In addition, to loan entrance counseling prior to receiving loan funds, exit counseling is required any time a student borrower takes a break from enrollment, or graduates. However, some students complete.

the exit counseling process while still enrolled simply to be reminded of key issues surrounding their student loans. The Office of Financial encourages a student to complete Entrance Counseling every year as a reminder of borrower's rights and responsibilities. As a participant in the federal loan programs, the College mandates that a soon-to-be graduate complete with federal Exit Counseling, and so we encourage when closing in on graduation, a personal visit with an OFA Staff Member to go over loan repayment options. A student with federal loans will have to complete the Federal Exit Counseling prior to receiving their doctorate degree.

Living frugally when in medical school can allow the student to graduate with less debt. It is far easier to reduce expenses than increase income. Understanding how spending choices made in college can persist for many years in the future. Know Your Federal Student Loan Debt

Federal Loan Borrowers can check how much they have borrowed to date by logging on to the National Student Loan Data System (NSLDS). A student can also use tools within the NSLDS website to understand their repayment amounts based on the size of the federal loan debt. For more information about your federal loan debt, your guarantor/lender, or your loan status, please click the following link <https://nsldsfa.ed.gov/login>.

Private Loan Borrowers should check with their lenders, for example Sallie Mae or Wells Fargo, to discuss loan debt and loan repayment specific to the student. Some private loan lenders will offer a student borrower deferment during residency. Often lenders have debt calculators, budget templates, and offer great ways to continue financial education.

Understanding Credit and your Credit Score

As a future professional it is important to know your credit score. Understanding your credit score, credit card usage, and debt to income ratio will help you in the future when it comes to financing homes, cars, private practices etc. Please click the following link to sign up for a free credit report and monitoring.

In addition, students should make a habit of monitoring their credit report. By law, you are entitled to one free copy of your report every year from each of the three credit reporting agencies. You can choose to access all three reports at once, or place three separate requests throughout a given year. Reports may be requested at

Student Loan Reconciliation

There are two types of student loan consolidation: federal and private. Private consolidation is often referred to as refinancing. These processes are often confused, but they're very different. Here's how:

- Federal student loan consolidation combines multiple federal loans into a single federal loan through the Department of Education. You may need to consolidate to be eligible for some federal loan repayment programs, but federal consolidation won't lower your interest rate. It may lower your payments by extending them.
- Student loan refinancing, which is also called private student loan consolidation, is a financial move you do through a private lender. If you qualify, you can save money by getting a lower interest rate.

Consolidation vs. refinancing

	Student loan consolidation	Student loan refinancing
What does it do?	Combines multiple federal loans into one federal loan.	Combines private and/or federal loans into one private loan.
Which loans can I combine?	Federal loans only.	Private and/or federal loans.
Can I lower my rates?	No.	Yes.
Can I save money?	No. Consolidation may lower your payments by extending the loan term, but your interest amount will increase.	Yes.
Can I access federal loan protections, repayment options and forgiveness programs?	Yes.	No.
Will I pay just one monthly bill?	Yes.	Yes.
